

Academician of the Social Sciences

Keith Lewin has been conferred by the Council of the Academy with the award of Academician of the U.K. Academy of Social Sciences. The Academy is composed of over 800 individual Academicians and 44 Learned Societies including most of the Learned Societies in the social sciences in the United Kingdom. The award is given by a committee of academic peers for contributions to the social sciences in the areas of thought leadership, practitioner applications or policy development. The Academy responds to Government requests for consultation on behalf of the social science community, organises meetings and seminars will and sponsors a number of schemes that promote social science and enhance its value to society. It exists to recognise, publicise and promote excellent social science and maintain robust standards of quality and professional integrity in social science.
